Afghans Look at 2014

Afghanistan's future looks ever more unpredictable as international forces move toward a planned drawdown in 2014. Many security and foreign policy analysts in Afghanistan and abroad fear a return of civil war and international isolation. Three questions now dominate international attention: are the Taliban likely to retake power after international forces withdraw? will President Hamid Karzai's government and armed forces be able to retain power? and what role will Afghanistan's neighbors—esp. Pakistan, India and Iran—play in the country's future?
